Experiencing New York by bike is one of the things that makes me feel most alive. I know whenever I meet another intrepid rider that I am meeting someone who shares the same sense of adventure and thrill for discovering the nooks and crannies of this great city.

René Fan works in the restoration of historic buildings, and has traveled abroad doing architectural documentation of the mud-brick architecture in Yemen, and a Tibetan Buddhist monastery in China. She lives in Brooklyn, and in her spare time enjoys taking drawing classes and playing her accordion with the Main Squeeze Orchestra.

Times Square was taken during a Critical Mass ride in the year after the infamous RNC. Despite the policing and arrests, the May 2005 ride still managed to make it to Midtown where we stopped at Broadway and 42nd Street. For me, the ride and the photo express the spirit, freedom, and power of biking in the city.
